Once famous for sweet Muscats, and later fortified Marsala, the island's best known wines are now its dry table wines produced under the regional IGT title, Terre Siciliane. The warm, dry climate with coastal breezes creates a low disease pressure meaning that chemical sprays are hardly needed and much of Sicilia's wine is produced from organic grapes.

SARDEGNA

Off the west coast of Italy, Sardegna is the second-largest island in the Mediterranean Sea. The island's separation from the mainland has led to a unique culture and identity, somewhat removed from the Italian mainstream. This is reflected in the Sardinian relationship with wine and the varieties planted here.
For much of its modern winemaking history Sardegna was governed by Spain, and many of its distinctive local grape varieties such as Bovale Sardo (Graciano), Bovale Grande (Mazuelo) and Cannonau (Garnache) are Spanish in origin.
The Sardegna wine region covers around 40,000 hectares of terrain. Vines are grown mainly in the rolling hills of Campidano between the capital Cagliari and Oristano in the southwest and in the plateaus north of Olbia around Sassari and Alghero.

Some of the best values in Italian wine come from this sunny, dry region. Puglian wine is the product of a diverse landscape; surrounded by water on three sides, the cool breezes from the Mediterranean moderate vineyard temperatures, and the warm climate and fertile soil make it easy to grow almost anything. The majority of Puglian wine is red, full-bodied and will pair well with a wide variety of foods. Producers in Puglia have focused on making great red wines, with local grapes like Negroamaro and Primitivo which make for delicious drinking.

Rich in cultural heritage, the region features ancient Greek and Roman settlements, including Pompeii, and picturesque towns like Sorrento and Amalfi, surrounded by stunning beaches and coastline.

In France nearly every type of wine imaginable is made in styles that vary from modern to very traditional. The top wine regions are Alsace, Bordeaux, Burgundy, Champagne, Loire Valley, Rhone Valley, Provence and Languedoc-Roussillon.
